

I would have liked to have grown up with the Sedaris family. Well... maybe not with them... maybe down the street a little. These folks are twisted in the absolute most delightful way! In this strange, sweet little show, they've allowed their imaginations to run wild, creating a cast of some of the most bizarre characters you may ever run across... not to mention the peanut!

But that said, they have also created people who desperately want things, who fervently believe in things, who truly care about things. These characters deal with startling change, with intolerance and insecurity, with love in all its varied forms. Yes, when they set out to hold Hamlet's mirror up to nature, theirs is invariably a funhouse mirror, but I think it's still very much a mirror. And hey, maybe we could all learn a little something from the little community of Cluster Haven (though I, personally, would not suggest taking cooking tips from them).
